For decades, teachers, leaders, and parents have supplemented their gospel teaching with the help of the Friend and Liahona magazines. Now some of these same resources are available online at LDS.org and organized so you can easily find the lesson helps you're looking for.

You can search for resources by topic, by category, and also by Primary lesson number in English by entering "Resources for Teaching Children" in the search bar on LDS.org. You can also navigate to this page from the Primary manuals page.

The topics portion of Resources for Teaching Children is also available in Spanish and Portuguese and can be accessed both from LDS.org or from the Liahona home page in these languages.

Resources include stories, activities, Liahona articles, and other Church-approved media for teaching children at home or in church. Additional topics will be added each month.

Primary Celebrates 135 Years

In Farmington, Utah, USA, 135 years ago, Bishop John W. Hess was concerned about the behavior of the children in his ward. He called the mothers of the ward together and talked about the importance of guiding the minds of young children.

Aurelia Spencer Rogers listened, and then discussed it with Eliza R. Snow, who visited Farmington in the spring of 1878. Sister Snow in turn met with Church President John Taylor, who authorized Bishop Hess to form an organization for children in his ward. The Farmington Ward Primary Association was formally organized on August 11, 1878, with Sister Rogers as president.

Today, approximately one million children all over the world benefit from Primary each week. Primary leaders and teachers strive to support parents in their role to help children gain testimonies of Heavenly Father, Jesus Christ, and the restored gospel. ■
