

FUN STOP

To Solve or Not to Solve?

You can tell that this year is going to be an interesting one in your new drama class. In the prop closet, one cardboard box contains two red hats. Another box contains two blue hats. A third box contains one red and one blue hat.

Each of the three boxes is labeled, but all labels are wrong. Your drama teacher explains that quick thinking is a valuable asset to any aspiring actor (that, and she also seems to like puzzles).

Your teacher poses the following challenge to you and your fellow stars of the stage: by opening only one box, without looking inside, and only removing one hat at random to inspect, how could you correctly determine the contents of all three boxes? The one who answers correctly gets to wear a Shakespearian crown for the remainder of class.

Solving in Circles

Have you ever worked hard at something only to end up right back where you started? It's not so fun when that happens in video game boss battles or science project experiments, but it's the perfect way to solve this puzzle.

Starting at the first word, change the previous word by only one letter to reach the new word. At the end, you'll be only one letter away from the original word.
