How to Feel like a King for a Day

Need some ideas on how to make Dad (or anybody else) feel on top of the world this Father's Day? Well look no further! Grab a friend or family member and fill out the blank spaces before reading the story.

No king should wake to a shrill alarm clock. Instead, why not provide a soothing                      loud noise to gently stir him from slumber? Now for the                      adjective feast! A kingly breakfast starts with a refreshing glass of                      adjective                      liquid. Next,                      verb up some of his favorite veggies with two types of bird eggs for a royal omelet. Add a side of                      plural noun to make it a feast truly fit for a king. After church, it's time for a little well-deserved relaxation. Simply round up a                      adjective                      noun and some                      color type of rock or mineral to create the ultimate bubble bath. A nice touch is to first light some                      adjective animal-scented candles before turning over the room. The king will                      verb into the tub and vanish for                      amount of time. If you'd like to present a kingly gift, the homemade variety works best. All you'll need are some                      plural noun, a few                      adjective                      plural noun, and a bit of glue to hold things together. A quick tip, first: Be sure to                      verb over the materials before gluing them to give the finished gift that extra                      adjective touch! And there you have it. A top-notch                      adjective recipe for a kingly day!
